Conservative MP Leslyn Lewis of Canada has warned that the Trudeau government wants to include "climate change" in the World Health Organization's (WHO) definition of a pandemic emergency. The WHO's Global Pandemic Accord is set to be finalized at the World Health Assembly in May.

"As countries prepare to finalize the WHO Global Pandemic Accord in May, the Liberals have been lobbying the WHO to include climate change in the definition of a pandemic emergency," posted Lewis on X, formerly Twitter.

In the past, Lewis has warned that the WHO pandemic treaty will compromise Canada's sovereignty. Last December, she condemned the Trudeau government for agreeing to pandemic amendments put forward by the WHO, which give the international organization more control over Canadian citizens.

According to Lewis' Access to Information request about Canada's input at the WHO Global Pandemic Accord, the Trudeau government supported the WHO's global pandemic treaty and suggested that the organization have the right to expand the definition of a pandemic.

The response read: "The new instrument should be inclusive and defined by an all-hazards approach in alignment with the International Health Regulation."

The response also said there are other global health threats "that are currently building and/or could result in a global health emergency," such as climate change impacts, "which may be scoped out of an instrument with too narrow a focus." ## Trudeau's use of "climate change" to control Canadians is an old tactic

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's use of "climate change" as an allegedly valid reason to control Canadians is not new for the Liberal Party, despite overwhelming evidence dispelling the myth of man-made "climate change." Since taking office in 2015, Trudeau has persistently pushed a radical environmental agenda that is similar to the agendas being pushed at the World Economic Forum's (WEF) "Great Reset" and the United Nations' "Sustainable Development Goals."

Under Trudeau's plan, he aims to decrease nitrous oxide emissions by limiting the use of fertilizer. However, farmers have warned that doing so will reduce their profits and result in food shortages.

The Trudeau government's continued rejection of Canadians' concerns and acceptance of the amendments isn't surprising because of Trudeau's environmental goals that align with the UN's "2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development."

Agenda 2030 was adopted by the UN General Assembly in 2015. Under the 17 Sustainable Development Goals, the UN wants to take "urgent action on climate change" and also support "the research and development of vaccines and medicines." Some of the 17 goals also target the expansion of "reproductive" services, including contraception and abortion, throughout the globe for women's rights.

The UN has announced that "all" nations working on the program "will implement this plan." Part of the plan includes eventually phasing out coal-fired power plants, reducing fertilizer usage and reducing gas use over the coming decades.

While Canada is one of the world's largest oil and gas producers, Trudeau has laid out his plans to slowly destroy the industry. Critics have warned about the Trudeau government's involvement in the WEF and other globalist groups, with some emphasizing the socialist, totalitarian nature of the "Great Reset" agenda and the likelihood that it will soon bring about a social credit system similar to Communist China.

Despite the UN and the Trudeau government acting against them, Canada's oil and gas sector recently received good news as the Supreme Court of Canada declared Trudeau's Impact Assessment Act, also called the "no-more pipelines" bill, mostly "unconstitutional."

Lewis is not afraid to criticize the Trudeau government for pushing a globalist, anti-life agenda on Canadians.

Early in 2023, Lewis noted that the WEF is not Canada's government and that Canadians did not "sign up" to be attached to one of its charters. Additionally, Lewis helped inform Canadians that Trudeau's Liberal government signed onto the WEF charter in 2020.
